Abigail A. Van Slyck trains an informed eye on the most visible and evocative aspect of summer camp life: its landscape and architecture. Far from a simple encounter with nature, Van Slyck argues that camps provided a man-made version of wilderness, shaped by middle-class anxieties about gender roles, class tensions, race relations, and modernity and its impact on children.

“This book takes up the American adult impulse to give its children—and future adults—a better life than the adults enjoy by returning the youths to the former ‘youthful,’ ‘primitive’ and pre-industrial civilization. Van Slyck’s recounting of the movement is successful. This thoughtful study demonstrates the changing definitions and needs of childhood, but, equally important, it shows how concepts of race, class, and gender were transferred to children through a seemingly innocent wilderness vacation.” —Journal of American Culture

“A richly textured history of the American summer camp that deepens our understanding of how the designs we take for granted are often laden with unexpected meaning.” —Design and Culture

Manhood Factories
YMCA Architecture and the Making of Modern Urban Culture
PAULA LUPKIN

Between the Civil War and the Great Depression, the Young Men’s Christian Association built more than a thousand community centers across the United States and in major cities around the world. Paula Lupkin goes behind the reserved Beaux-Arts facades of typical YMCA buildings constructed in this period to understand the urban anxieties, moral agendas, and conceptions of masculinity that guided their design, construction, and use.

Beginning with the early history of the YMCA and the construction of New York City’s landmark Twenty-third Street YMCA of 1869, Lupkin follows the efforts of YMCA leaders to shape a modern yet moral public culture and even define class, race, ethnicity, and gender through its buildings. Illustrated with many rarely seen photographs, maps, and drawings, Manhood Factories offers a fascinating new perspective on a venerable institution and its place in America’s cultural and architectural history.

“The YMCAs are so deeply engrained in American life that they are nearly invisible. Paula Lupkin brings the ubiquitous buildings that house the institution vividly to life, deftly combining visual and spatial analysis, social history, and gender studies to restore a major urban building type to its rightful place in architectural history.” —Dell Upton, UCLA

“Studying the ‘Y’ buildings for how they worked to combine spiritual uplift and home values with sport culture, Paula Lupkin reveals how its members created ‘a respectable evangelical public culture for the modern, corporate age.’ This is an impressive account of how the YMCA envisioned, spatialized, and institutionalized manhood and manliness.” —Dana Nelson, Vanderbilt University

Modernism after Wagner
JULIET KOSS

References to the Gesamtkunstwerk, a “total work of art,” abound in discussions of modern art and culture. In Modernism after Wagner, Juliet Koss explores the history and legacy of Wagner’s concept, laying out its genealogy and the political, aesthetic, and cultural context from which it emerged, and tracing its development and reception through the 1930s.

“This is an extraordinary book: thoughtful, deft, and learned, it offers a compelling revisionist account of the history and destiny of the Gesamtkunstwerk. The implications for our understanding of the Gesamtkunstwerk are transformative: this book challenges us to rethink not only a conventional history, but our propensity to parrot a conventional party line of that history.” —David J. Levin, University of Chicago; Executive Editor, The Opera Quarterly

“A radically revisionist and convincing case that the 19th century ideal of the total work of art (Gesamtkunstwerk) and the modernist concept of estrangement are locked in dialogue rather than opposition.” —Barry Bergdoll, The Philip Johnson Chief Curator of Architecture and Design, The Museum of Modern Art

“Avoiding the elegiac register of recent studies, Koss brings to an impossibly expansive subject a welcome historical precision, laced with mordant wit.” —Tim Barringer, Yale University

Cold War on the Home Front
The Soft Power of Midcentury Design
GREG CASTILLO

NEW The first in-depth history of how domestic environments were exploited to promote the superiority of either capitalism or socialism on both sides of the Iron Curtain, Cold War on the Home Front reveals the tactics used by the American government to seduce citizens of the Soviet bloc with state-of-the-art consumer goods and the reactions of the Communist Party. Using a mosaic of sources ranging from recently declassified government documents to homemaking journals and popular fiction, Cold War on the Home Front contributes an engaging new perspective on midcentury modernist style and its political uses at the dawn of the Cold War.

“Fascinating ... the scholarship is excellent and Castillo’s lyrical writing captures the surprise and the drama in this powerful narrative. While focusing on official decisions about architecture, Cold War on the Home Front skillfully juxtaposes the two sides of the international conflict over Berlin, bringing the conflict alive and capturing the fullness of its meaning.” —Gwendolyn Wright, author of USA: Modern Architectures in History

“A significant contribution, both in terms of archival evidence and of the sophistication of his argument, to an evolving literature on culture, consumerism, and the Cold War.” —Walter Hixson, author of The Myth of American Diplomacy

Architecture’s Historical Turn
Phenomenology and the Rise of the Postmodern
JORGE OTERO-PAILOS

NEW Jorge Otero-Pailos shows how architectural phenomenology radically transformed how architects engaged, theorized, and produced history. In the first critical intellectual account of the movement, Otero-Pailos discusses the contributions of leading members, including Jean Labatut, Charles Moore, Christian Norberg-Schulz, and Kenneth Frampton. For architects maturing after World War II, Otero-Pailos contends, architectural history was a problem rather than a given. Paradoxically, their awareness of modernism’s historicity led some of them to search for an ahistorical experiential constant that might underpin all architectural expression. They drew from phenomenology, exploring the work of Bachelard, Merleau-Ponty, Heidegger, and Ricoeur, which they translated for architectural audiences.

Otero-Pailos reveals how, ultimately, the rise of architectural phenomenology played a crucial double role in the rise of postmodernism, creating the antimodern specter of a historical consciousness and offering the modern notion of essential experience as the means to defeat it.

Utopia’s Ghost
Architecture and Postmodernism, Again
REINHOLD MARTIN

NEW Architectural postmodernism had a significant impact on the broader development of postmodern thought: Utopia’s Ghost is a critical reconsideration of their relationship. Combining discourse analysis, historical reconstruction, and close readings of buildings, projects, and texts from the 1970s and 1980s, Reinhold Martin argues that retheorizing postmodern architecture gives us new insights into cultural postmodernism and its aftermath.

Much of today’s discussion has turned to the recovery of modernity, but Martin writes, “Simply to historicize postmodernism seems inadequate and, in many ways, premature.” Utopia’s Ghost connects architecture to current debates on biopolitics, neoliberalism, and corporate globalization as they are haunted by the problem of utopia. Exploring a series of concepts—territory, history, language, image, materiality, subjectivity, and architecture itself—Martin shows how they reorganize the cultural imaginary and shape a contemporary biopolitics that ultimately precludes utopian thought.

Written at the intersection of culture, politics, and the city, particularly in the context of corporate globalization, Utopia’s Ghost challenges dominant theoretical paradigms and opens new avenues for architectural scholarship and cultural analysis.

Mine Towns
Buildings for Workers in Michigan’s Copper Country
ALISON K. HOAGLAND

NEW The first working-class history of domestic life in Copper Country company towns during the boom years of 1890 to 1918, Alison K. Hoagland’s Mine Towns investigates how the architecture of a company town revealed the paternal relationship that existed between company managers and workers—a relationship that both parties turned to their own advantage. The story of Joseph and Antonia Putrich, immigrants from Croatia, punctuates and illustrates the realities of life in a booming company town. While company managers provided housing as a way to develop and control a stable workforce, workers often rejected this domestic ideal and used homes as an economic resource, taking in boarders to help generate further income.

Focusing on how the exchange between company managers and a largely immigrant workforce took the form of negotiation rather than a top-down system, Hoagland examines surviving buildings and uses Copper Country’s built environment to map this remarkable connection between a company and its workers at the height of Michigan’s largest land rush.

Seeking Spatial Justice
EDWARD W. SOJA

NEW  In Seeking Spatial Justice, Edward W. Soja argues that justice has a geography and that the equitable distribution of resources, services, and access is a basic human right. Building on current concerns in critical geography and the new spatial consciousness, Soja interweaves theory and practice, offering new ways of understanding and changing the unjust geographies in which we live.

The Road to Botany Bay
An Exploration of Landscape and History
PAUL CARTER

BACK IN PRINT  The Road to Botany Bay, first published in 1987 and considered a classic in the field of cultural and historical geography, examines the poetic constitution of colonial society. Through a far-reaching exploration of Australia’s mapping, narrative description, early urbanism, and bush mythology, Paul Carter exposes the mythopoetic mechanisms of empire. A powerfully written account of the ways in which language, history, and geography influenced the territorial theater of nineteenth-century imperialism, the book is also a call to think, write, and live differently.

“Paul Carter’s bold, ingenious account of nation-founding is itself a kind of founding book—of the adventurous discipline of spatial history. And The Road to Botany Bay is marvelous to read on traveling, on writing, on looking and seeing. A brilliant book for many appetites.” —Susan Sontag

“In this account of how Australia originated in the acts of settlement, possession, and dispossession, by explorers who traveled, named, and wrote, Carter advances a brilliantly daring notion of imperialism, one with great relevance to other regions of the world.” —Edward Said

The Spiv and the Architect
Unruly Life in Postwar London
RICHARD HORNSEY

As London emerged from the devastation of the Second World War, planners sought to rebuild the city in ways that would reshape the behavior of its citizens—a program defined by a strong emphasis on civic order and conservative values of national community. Richard Hornsey examines how queer men legitimized, resisted, and reinvented this ambitious reconstruction program. Providing the first critical history of this cultural moment, The Spiv and the Architect weaves together a vast archive of sources—urban planning documents and design exhibitions about the modern British home, among others—to present both a radically revised account of homosexuality in postwar London and an important new narrative about mid-twentieth-century British modernity.

“Imaginative and engaging, The Spiv and the Architect makes us look afresh at the everyday intersections between queer sexualities and the urban fabric of reconstructed London after the Second World War. Just when planners and politicians tried to control the movements and behavior of the citizens of the ‘New Jerusalem,’ Hornsey finds the disorderly traces of queer desires and subjectivities irrupting in some surprising places.” —Matt Houlbrook, author of Queer London: Perils and Pleasures in the Sexual Metropolis, 1918–1957
